

IRRADIATED FLUID BED REACTOR

Abstract

A fluid bed reactor uses energy sources to excite and energize atomic components so as to effect and increase orbital energy. In a preferred embodiment light irradiates agitated particulate in a photolysis reaction to generate singlet oxygen in the gas phase. In a second embodiment microwave radiation stimulates a particulate linked endoperoxide to release singlet oxygen.